Bionics or biomimetics studies the structure and functioning of living beings with the aim of creating artificial materials and mechanisms that are inspired by nature. The first cases of bionics can be found in parasols and umbrellas, and in oars and rudders. Since then the interest in learning and imitating nature has not stopped, and today we have very recent inventions that also appear in this book... like the latest robots.

Viruses, Bacteria and Other Nano Bugs

Under the microscope are the creatures that really rule this world. They are small and very numerous: on just one of your feet there is already more invisible life than there are visible animals in all Europe. And if that was not enough, the creatures you live with are real zombies, because viruses... are not alive!
